

A teacher. A student. And a book.

A tech-enabled, teacher-first instructional tool empowering teachers to create rigorous literacy lessons

Why ALEE?

Alexandria Learning Ecosystem for Educators (ALEE) transforms teacher development, commits to teacher success, and ensures that access to a quality education survives. We believe the key to teaching literacy well lies in good books and good teachers. ALEE is an investment in teachers through high-quality support.

Current solutions alienate teachers and fail students.

Scripted curricula rob teachers of the opportunity to learn by doing and puts constraints on those who know students best. “Student-led” technologies assume children have the expertise to teach themselves and aim to replace teachers altogether. Online platforms are often open-sourced and unvetted, leaving teachers to spend dozens of hours per week sifting through low-quality options.

ALEE transforms teacher support.

We respect those who choose to teach and understand that teachers know their students best. Our content is created by former educators. It is standards-aligned, scaffolded, and intellectually rigorous—but it is also highly adaptable.

We empower teachers to make ALEE work for them and their students.

ALEE Features

Curated Library

We do the heavy lifting of finding the richest books, old and new. We also curate text sets to help build background knowledge.

Lesson Plan Builder

Our platform allows teachers to build lessons using a combination of our content and their own, maximizing growth and impact.

Searchable by Standards

Our easy-to-use interface allows teachers to search by a variety of curricular requests such as standards and literary devices.

Guidance & Autonomy

Teachers choose how they want to use our content in their lesson plans, providing the right balance of guidance and autonomy.

Exportable Lessons

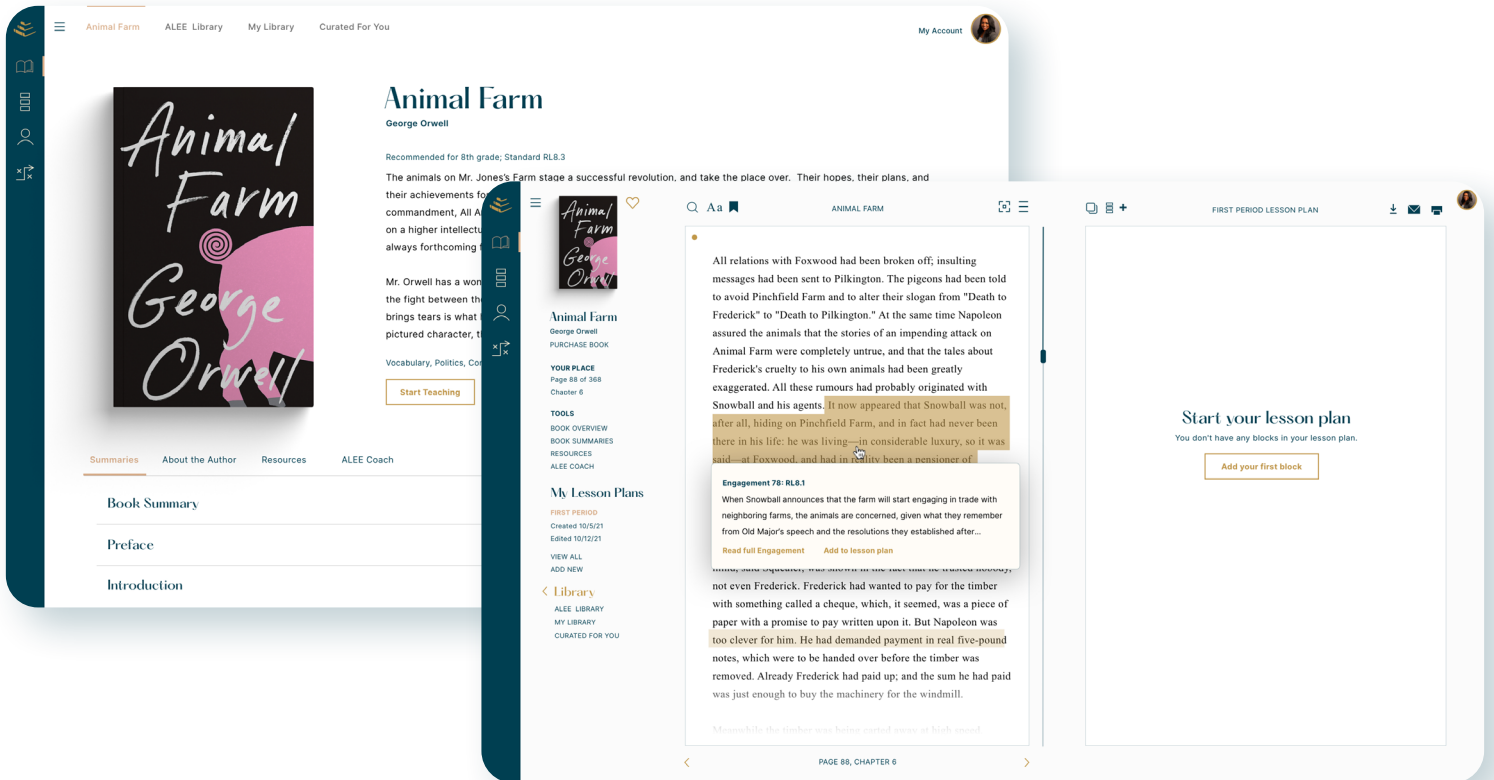

We make it simple for teachers to share with a co-teacher, instructional coach, or related service provider.

Scaffolded Content

Our instructional engagements are scaffolded in multiple directions to meet the needs of learners at all levels.

A teacher. A student. And a book.

The Bottom Line

The lack of continued, high-quality professional development is the leading cause of teacher attrition and is exacerbated in under-served communities—further driving inequities in education. Teacher preparation and experience are the most important factors in determining student outcomes, yet 44% of the teaching force is within their first five years of teaching.

Administrators can think of ALEE as a coach for teachers of all ages and experience levels. We teach the teacher, not the lesson. Every time a teacher uses ALEE, they learn something new. When teachers use ALEE, the effects are immediate—with a direct impact on student achievement. Our standards-aligned, scaffolded content, merged with the incredible work teachers do to build their curricula, positively impacts student achievement on a day-to-basis and beyond.

By providing a balance of autonomy and support, we can make teaching a job worth choosing.

Invest in our teachers and in the tools that support them today.
