The skull snickers and moves ever closer, but that doesn't surprise me. The reason death sticks so closely to life isn't biological necessity—it's envy. Life is so beautiful that death has fallen in love with it, a jealous, possessive love that grabs at what it can. But life leaps over oblivion lightly, losing only a thing or two of no importance, and gloom is but the passing shadow of a cloud. The pink boy also got the

With the Curriculet platform, you can personalize reading assignments, let students make their own selections, or both. You can create differentiated lessons for the same book or article. Add in-depth interactions that engage your most advanced students, build scaffolded support prompts for students that need help stretching to comprehend the text, and make any content you select for the whole class instruction accessible and meaningful for every student.

Readers Get Real-Time Feedback

When your students use Curriculet, they get real-time feedback and support while they read. Students can look up any word in the text, make annotations, get instant answers on check-point questions, and receive in-system responses from you. It's as if your students are reading with you by their side.

The screenshot displays the Curriculet interface. On the left, a text passage from 'Dracula' is shown, with a small blue question mark icon next to a highlighted sentence. On the right, a 'Question' sidebar is visible, containing a list of options for a multiple-choice question. The options are: 'criticisms of Count Dracula', 'references to astrology', 'literary allusions', and 'remarks that foreshadow future events'. A 'Submit' button is at the bottom of the sidebar.

strange that when Arpad and his legions swept through the Hungarian fatherland he found us here when he reached the frontier, that the Honfoglalas was completed there? And when the Hungarian flood swept eastward, the Szekelys were claimed as kindred by the victorious Magyars, and to us for centuries was trusted the guarding of the frontier of Turkeyland. Aye, and more than that, endless duty of the frontier guard, for as the Turks say, "water sleeps, and the enemy is sleepless." Who more gladly than we throughout the Four Nations received the "bloody sword," or at its warlike call flocked quicker to the standard of the King? When was redeemed that great shame of my nation, the shame of Cassova, when the flags of the Wallach and the Magyar went down beneath the Crescent? Who was it but one of my own race who as Voivode crossed the Danube and beat the Turk on his own ground? This was a Dracula indeed! Woe was it that his own unworthy brother, when he had fallen, sold his people to the Turk and brought the shame of slavery on them! Was it not this Dracula, indeed, who inspired that other of his race who in a later age again and again brought his forces over the great river into Turkeyland, who, when he was beaten back, came again, and again, though he had to come alone from the bloody field where his troops were being slaughtered, since he knew that he alone could ultimately triumph? They said that he thought only of himself. Bah! What good are peasants without a leader? Where ends the war without a brain and heart to conduct it? Again, when, after the battle of Mohacs, we threw off the Hungarian yoke, we of the Dracula blood were amongst their leaders, for our spirit would not brook that we were not free. Ah, young sir, the Szekelys, and the Dracula as their heart's blood, their brains, and their swords, can boast a record that mushroom growths like the Hapsburgs and the Romanoffs can never reach. The warlike days are over. Blood is too precious a thing in these days of dishonourable peace, and the glories of the great races are as a tale that is told."

It was by this time close on morning, and we went to bed. (Mem., this diary seems horribly like the beginning of the "Arabian Nights," for everything has to break off at cockcrow, or like the ghost of Hamlet's father.)

12 May.—Let me begin with facts, bare, meager facts, verified by books and figures, and of which there can be no doubt. I must not confuse them with experiences which will have to rest on my own observation, or my memory of them. Last evening when the Count came from his room he began by asking me questions on legal matters and on the doing of certain

You'll never need to hand out and grade another paper quiz to know if your students read. You'll know before you walk into the classroom – how many of your students read the assignment, how well they understand the text, and how to best spend your time reinforcing areas where they are struggling. With Curriculet, you are empowered as an educator to best teach and support classes' needs.

A photograph of a person lying down, reading a tablet. The image is overlaid with a semi-transparent blue filter. The person's head is in the lower-left corner, and their hand is holding the tablet in the center. The background is blurred, showing what appears to be a bed and some furniture.

Curriculet was created to nurture a greater love of reading in an increasingly digital age.

Begin Your Free Trial

Curriculet's founder, Jason Singer, created the reading program after seeing his students use and excel at advanced, complex, text-heavy video games, but fail to comprehend a traditional book at their reading level. And an unsettling trend began to emerge that children's love of reading only decreased as they got older. Singer devised Curriculet to counteract this trend.
