UNIVERSITIES PARTNER WITH THE STUKENT MARKETING PRINCIPLES SIMULATION TO SCALE ENGAGING LEARNING INTERACTIONS

80.4% of students recommend Stukent

THE STUDENTS

Before we hop into the case study, it's important to give you information on who the participants were. These students enrolled in a marketing principles course at an anonymous university in the Midwest U.S. The chart below categorizes these students based on their major.

For this case study, students used the new Stukent marketing simulation, Mimic Marketing Principles, and a leading competitor's simulation to learn concepts such as the 4 Ps of marketing. They were then asked to provide feedback on their experience by filling out a survey. The survey data shows a variety of majors participate in marketing principles courses – not just marketing majors.

What is your major?

THE CHALLENGE

This is an era filled with unique learning challenges like increased remote learning, and marketing professors are looking for ways to engage all majors in their classes in a scalable way. Unfortunately, a recent study released by the Charles Koch Foundation and College Pulse found that the online learning shift is hitting students hard. The chart below shows data gathered from over 5,000 undergrads representing 215 universities:

In general, do you think online classes are more effective, less effective, or just as effective as in-person classes in helping students...

Data from "COVID-19 On Campus: The Future of Learning" by the Charles Koch Foundation and College Pulse

University departments do an excellent job identifying the learning concepts needed for aptitude. However, the next challenge is to help students who do not understand the importance of gaining aptitude in certain learning concepts – which is a disconnect that prevents them from ultimately succeeding and puts needless pressure on instructors.

In these areas, students heavily benefit from simulations, which show them how particular marketing concepts apply to possible real-world scenarios. They can be powerful tools to help students of all majors to succeed.

THE SOLUTION

Universities want to provide a sufficiently challenging experience in their marketing principles course for marketing majors, but they also want to engage majors who aren't specifically interested in marketing concepts.

Stukent helps universities and marketing departments create awesome course experiences that teach real-world marketing skills while engaging all majors.

"This simulation was amazing. With each round of the simulation I grew more confident. I've gained a much better understanding of marketing strategy and had a lot of fun doing it. Go Stukent!"
